Poetry.

Soul-Saving.

BY HATTIE TOWNSHEND.
I am sick of the present—oh, strain—
Save your soul, save your soul, save your soul;
I am tired of hearing forever and
The same old story from the pulpit roll.
It seems to me like a selfish cry,
This telling a man that the only thing
Of any importance he has
Is saving himself from a future sting.
Far nobler, far better, it seems to me,
To tell a man to save some other;
To send him on down through the world,
Seeking and saving his neighbor.
To put him off from the beaten track,
Out into the hedge of sin and shame,
To teach him to tell the captive there
The beauty and glory of virtue's name;
To rescue the starving one from death;
To rescue the sinner from his crime;
To reach the heathen and the alien,
To the weary one on the shores of time;
To seek out those whom the world forgets;
To plant a flower on a nameless grave;
To hide the erring one in the heart,
And strengthen it with a purpose brave;
To do the little ones of God,
The things which the world does not see;
To walk the way of the world's grand,
And, with the eye of the world to wait.
If a man does this, I dare affirm
That he can afford to forego all care
About going to heaven, and give his whole time
To the work of getting his neighbor there.

Tales and Sketches.

A COUNTRY CHORISTER.

"It is a case," said Jane, "of the sheep that tumbled over the precipice, and the whole flock rushed pell-mell after it. Of course the sheep could not be expected to escape the ridiculous infection. At this obscure hyperbole Mrs. Fairfield opened her eyes, and looked at her eldest daughter in bewilderment. "It's plain to be seen," pursued Jane, "that Dora is head over ears in love with Miles Van Dorn, like all the other folks in the parish." Mrs. Fairfield quite brushed at this bold assertion. "I am ashamed of you, Jane," she said, severely. "Dora's a mere child, and has no more idea of that than a babe in arms. I should think you'd have more delicacy than to accuse your sister of giving her love unsought." "That's a bald, bald, bald," said the practical Jane, "don't profess to know much about the tender passion, but the little attention I've bestowed upon it proves to me that it holds itself quite beyond the vision of a village schoolmistress. It is a pity to gain a reputation for this piping shepherd is the only thing that gives me a hope of quenching her love for her." "Nonsense, Jane," said her mother. "Of course she respects him—we all do; but as for love—"
